Comment:

The report [redacted] furnished credible data on the 35th Inf Regt, most of which confirms previous information.
The following items of information are noteworthy:

c. The data on the organization of the regimental units constitutes valuable information on strength and armament of the companies.

(1) The infantry gun company (equipped with 76-mm short-barreled guns), which was frequently quoted in previous reports, is presumably not included in all infantry regiments or may have been disbanded.

(2) The AT company (frequently quoted as artillery battery) is, in some regiments, equipped with 76-mm AT guns instead of 45-mm AT guns.

(3) The technical company probably consists of three platoons: Telephone platoon, radio platoon and engineer platoon. In some regiments telephone platoon and radio platoon may be combined in one signal platoon.

(4) The motor transport platoon (also quoted as repair shop platoon) is a new component of the headquarters company.

(5) The fifth companies of the battalions were frequently referred to as heavy weapons companies, equipped with mortars and AT guns. The report, however, indicates that the fifth companies of some non-independent infantry battalions may be equipped only with mortars.

d. It is known from several previous reports that the reconnaissance platoons of the infantry regiments belonging to the 11th Inf Div are undergoing special training in Chotesov. [redacted] reconnaissance units of other divisions and brigades receive special training, [redacted] statement that reconnaissance units constitute a branch of service of their own may be correct. The new submachine guns to be issued to the SMG Co and the Rcn Plat were probably of model 48. *

e. [redacted] contingents of the 1928 class were inducted with the 1927 class in October 1949 (only 10 to 15 percent of the 1928 class-volunteers) [redacted]
